School dinners get red alert

Children at an Oldbury school have been taught that red means danger when it comes to sitting down to lunch.

Staff at Warley High School have put warning signs on food such as jatty or sugary food like chips and jelly as part of a new project to encourage pupils towards a better diet.

During the rest of the week high-sugar and high-fat foods will carry the red for danger warnings, while salads, brown rice, wholemeal pitta, and jacket potatoes will be marked green.

Mrs Marian Fearon, health education officer at the Pound Road school, said: "Food carrying a high fat or sugar content will be marked red so pupils will know what to avoid and healthy things such as wholemeal pittas, coloured green.

"You can't abolish everything from the beginning, but hopefully after this week pupils will know what they should be eating for a

Should I or shouldn't I? Pupil Adrian Albrighton doesn't know what's good for him as supervisor Pat T the dish of the day at Warley High School
